

AFTER THE WEDDING

BY MARY H. FANNEY.

The happy bright lights of the wedding

tonight in my heart are dying.

And my life now is a dull, uninteresting existence. I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

I am now a widow.

The street, with a well-dressed man, who had evidently just parted from him, was walking rapidly in the opposite direction. He followed the stranger to the Mansion House, and saw him take a haymaker's omnibus.

This suited Carter exactly. He went round to the front of the vehicle and got up beside the driver. Then he climbed above the roof and seated himself above the door.

At the Hotel Restaurant the man whom he was following got out and went to refresh himself, while Carter waited patiently outside. At last he re-appeared, and Carter quietly followed him down Holborn, up Gray's Inland and into duty street. He followed the man to the door of the pretended residence, and then he waited. He waited for some time, and then he saw the man enter. He
